Local Contractor Recognized as a Certified Window “Installation Master™”

Mark Klein, of Windoor Company, Inc., Swansea, IL has recently joined a select group of window and door “installation Masters™” for new construction and remodeling projects.

”Everyone who is building or remodeling a house should know that no matter how much they spend on top notch windows, the windows won’t perform properly if they’re not installed correctly, “ explained Klein. “Poor installation techniques can defeat the advantages of the product and result in air or water leaks, waste or energy, or improper operation.”

To qualify as a certified Installation Masters™, Klein attended an intensive two-day training course, coordinated locally by Windoor Company, Inc. and conducted by the American Architectural Association (AAMA) accredited instructors of Simonton Windows. The installers had to demonstrate competency by passing a written exam, designed to test the knowledge they gained during the training course. Once they passed the exam they became certified Installation Masters™”

“We’re well aware that many people are wary of contractors, given the horror stories you sometimes hear about shoddy workmanship and the negative impact this has on reputable, reliable resource,” said Klein, displaying the official Installation Masters™ photo card. Consumers can confirm that a window installer is qualified under the program by asking to see the program ID card, provided by the national program administrator after successfully completing the training.”

The AAMA, the professional association of some 300 top residential and commercial window, door and skylight manufacturers and suppliers, developed Installation Masters™
